ASEAN Ceramics 2017 takes centre stage

As Southeast Asia grows in global positioning and ceramic manufacturing dominance so too does the importance of ASEAN Ceramics in the international events calendar.

The changing climate in Europe has also helped drive investment and competition in the region with companies looking to new markets for expansion. Exchange rate advantages, high quality production and lower domestic demand has created positive incentives for businesses penetrating Asia and this too has been reflected in recent trends and the growth of ASEAN Ceramics in Bangkok.

The fact that China's costs and market barriers continue to rise, Europe is looking East and all the while ASEAN's material and technology demands increase, there is little surprise that ASEAN Ceramics 2017 is set to become the most successful event of the series, and most likely the region, so far. Staged on the slightly earlier dates of the 31 August to 2 September the event is set to attract a Pan-Asian audience for its typically strong global exhibits of material and technology for ceramic manufacturing in Asia.

Colorobbia take front line presence in new Expo Hall

Colorobbia take a dominant presence at ASEAN Ceramics 2017 to showcase their latest innovations for Asia as the company celebrates its presence and growth in the region and expands its product range and technical support base.

Colorobbia, head-quartered in Italy, is made up of companies worldwide specialised in the production and distribution of raw materials and semi-finished products for the ceramic and glass industry. Their solutions are able to satisfy the entire manufacturing process of each sector related to industrial ceramics and their regional team will be at ASEAN Ceramics to present and support these solutions to the entire Asian market.

ASEAN Ceramics hits the headlines

The region's leading publication, Asian Ceramics, this month runs a special feature on ASEAN Ceramics 2017 as it highlights the 'Rising Star' in the exhibition scene and announces the latest market developments supporting the event and the expo special features that provide the backdrop and unique positioning of the event.
